WELCOME to Jacobs Field!

Dear Indians Fans:

The 2003 Major League Baseball season will be the 10th at Jacobs Field. Many memorable moments have been created in that short period of time — two World Series, an All-Star Game, 29 post-season games. Last at-bat heroics . . . too many to count!

It all started with a group of talented young players who, when given the opportunity to establish themselves at the Major League level, developed into a series of teams that put Cleveland back on the baseball map. Record-setting performances on the field and in the seats followed, thanks to the passion of Tribe fans.

We are poised to repeat that same success story. In a short period of time, General Manager Mark Shapiro and his staff have fortified the foundation of the team — our player development system — which is ranked at the top among all 30 MLB teams according to a number of national baseball publications. We have taken a large step in the process of identifying the players who will become the building blocks of our future success.

The job is not done, however, as manager Eric Wedge often states. The next step is developing the young players and providing the opportunity to perform at the Major League level. Together we look forward to the 2003 season with excitement as we begin to build and sustain a championship team in an environment of superior sports entertainment at Jacobs Field.

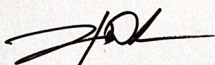

Your enjoyment of Indians Baseball is our main priority — whether you choose to enjoy listening on the Indians Radio Network with flagship station WTAM, watching on FOX Sports Net, accessing via our website at indians.com, reading the newspaper, or visiting Jacobs Field.

While 2003 is the 10th season at Jacobs Field, it is also the 103rd season as a Charter Member of the American League. Professional baseball in Cleveland is one of the city's oldest traditions. With that rich heritage comes a civic trust.

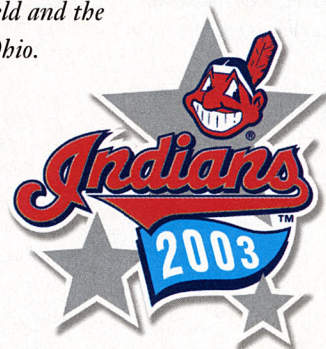

We pledge our commitment to a supportive community that understands the important connection between Indians Baseball at Jacobs Field and the significant economic impact this link creates for Northeast Ohio.

Here's hoping we see you often at Jacobs Field.

Sincerely,

Larry Dolan
President and Chief Executive Officer

6 A PITCHER'S CATCHER

by Steve Herrick

Josh Bard is a catcher who enjoys a good relationship with his pitching staff. The Tribe's new backstop considers it his mission each day to make sure his starting pitcher and relievers have the best possible outing they can.

Mel Harder, who passed away last October, was one of the greatest pitchers to ever wear an Indians uniform. He was also one of the team's best pitching coaches – credited with developing the talents of other members of the team's pitching elite.

You may have noticed that each member of the Tribe is wearing a circular patch on his jersey that features the number 18 – Mel Harder's number, which the Indians have retired.

A Pitcher's Catcher

by Steve Herrick

When the Little League coaches hand out the equipment, most kids don't want to go near the catcher's gear. They'd rather think about hitting, pitching, or roaming around the field so they can make flashy plays.

Catching, on the other hand, barely gets a thought. Squatting behind home plate, after all, isn't the most glamorous job in the game and most youngsters would just as soon run the other way.

That wasn't the case with Josh Bard. He grabbed the catching gear the first chance he got and hasn't taken it off since.

"I was definitely the opposite," he said. "I liked being in the dirt."

The position Bard fell in love with propelled him to a fine college career, a job in professional baseball, a quick trip through the Minor Leagues and, ultimately, a spot with the Indians as their No. 1 catcher this season.

"I was five or six years old when I started catching," he said. "It was an opportunity to be around the ball all the time. That's what I wanted to do."

Deciding on his position came down to something else Bard learned at an early age.

"I'm not a good athlete," he said. "I'm not going to play anywhere else."

"Josh understands exactly what we want from him . . . He's focused on the pitcher and he knows that's his job – to make the pitcher that day the very best he possibly can."

But, all kidding aside, catching is no joking matter with Bard. "Catching is something I really enjoy and take a lot of pride in," he said. "When you're behind the plate you have to learn every

Bard knows the special ingredient that makes for a good relationship between a catcher and pitcher.

"The key to me is communication," he said. "You've got to have a good game plan. You also need to have a good feel for what your pitcher is doing well on that day."

Wedge thinks Bard, a switch-hitter, can also help the Indians offensively. Bard has a .282 career Minor League average, including a .297 mark with six homers and 53 RBI last season at Buffalo.

"I think that part of Josh's game gets overlooked a little bit," said Wedge. "We put a lot of emphasis on what he does behind the plate, but he has a very solid swing and hits from both sides of the plate. I think he's going to be a productive hitter."

"My priority has always been my catching, but I still work a lot on my hitting," said Bard. "I just think my defense comes first and my hitting is second."

The acquisition of Bard has turned out to be one of the best trades in recent memory for the Indians. He was picked up, along with outfielder Jody Gerut, from Colorado for outfielder Jacob Cruz on June 1, 2001. Bard began last season at Buffalo before being called on August 23 after Einar Diaz sustained an elbow injury.

"It was a dream come true to make it to the big leagues," he said. "It was a long day. We were playing in Rochester. Eric called me into his office after the game and told me I was going to Cleveland. It was a whirlwind, but actually that was probably good because I didn't have time to think about things."

As it turned out, the whirlwind had just begun. Bard was in the lineup that night against Seattle and singled in his second at-bat off Seattle's Joel Pinero. He then hit a game-winning home run off James Baldwin in the bottom of the ninth.

Bard's brother, Mike, was at the game. Following the game Bard called his wife, Lindsey, and his parents, Ron and Gail.

"I have the ball at my house," he said. "I kept it in my room. I'm not into putting stuff on display."

Bard homered the next day off Jamie Moyer to become the first Cleveland player to homer in his first two games since Earl Averill did it in 1929. He compiled a nine-game hitting streak and finished the season batting .222 with three homers and 12 RBI.

Baseball is a passion for the Bard family. Mike is the head baseball coach at Dallas Baptist University. Josh credits his parents for helping him reach the Majors.

"They sacrificed a lot for me to get where I am today," he said. "They were really supportive. My dad worked extra to help us. My mom drove me all over the place. My mom knows more about baseball than half the guys in the big leagues."

The Indians saw enough of Bard to trade Diaz to Texas in the off-season.

"That showed me they have a lot of confidence in me," Bard said. "That made me feel good, but it didn't change the way I approached anything. I worked as hard as I always did in the off-season."

Bard starred in high school in the Denver area and was selected by Minnesota in the 35th round in the 1996 June Draft. He instead decided to attend Texas Tech University, where he starred for three years. Bard was then drafted by Colorado in the third round of the 1999 June Draft. He spent the 2000 season and part of the 2001 season in the Rockies farm system before being traded to the Indians.

"I've always wanted to be in on every play," he said. "I feel like I was made to be a catcher."

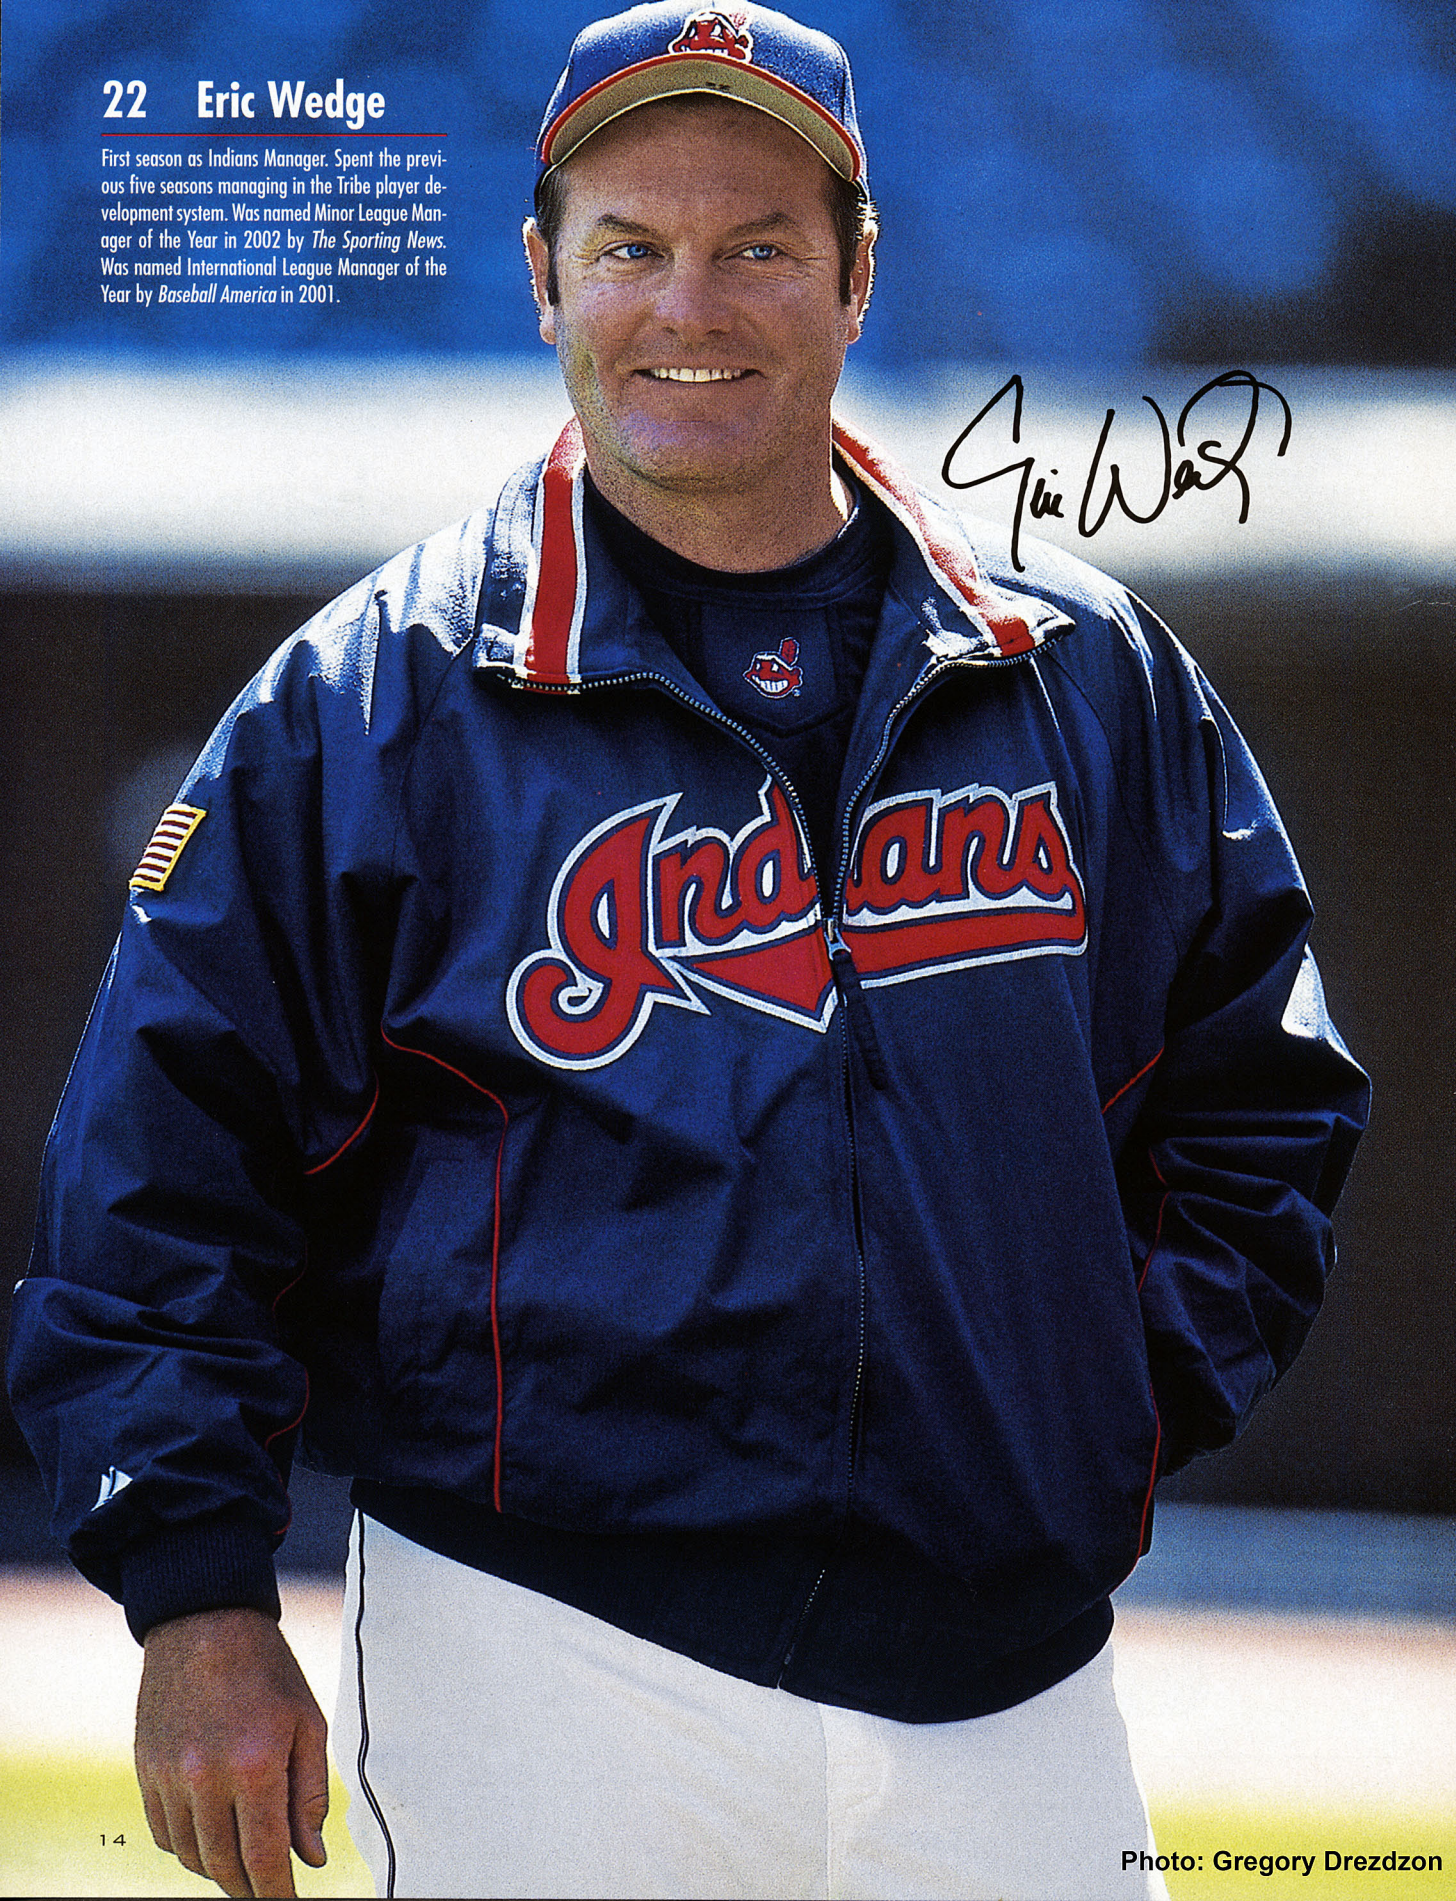

That's a sentiment Wedge and the Indians pitching staff will surely agree with.

John McDonald's Father's Day Contest

This season, second baseman John McDonald will make Father's Day extra special for fathers everywhere. The program, "Mac & Me" will allow Tribe fans under the age of 18 a chance to enter their name in a raffle and win A Day at Jacobs Field with Johnny Mac and his dad!

One hundred names will be randomly drawn to select the winners as special guests of John and his father. Winners will enjoy lunch at Jacobs Field, receive a special Mac & Me t-shirt, observe batting practice, and meet John, his dad, and other Tribe players prior to the game.

Lawton's Little Leaguers

For the second season, outfielder Matt Lawton will once again bring hundreds of local youth to attend a Tribe game this summer. "Lawton's Little Leaguers" is open to local non-profit organizations serving disadvantaged youth in Northeast Ohio. Each "Lawton's Little Leaguers" participant will enjoy a boxed lunch, see batting practice, receive a "Lawton's Little Leaguers" t-shirt, and meet Matt before the game.

True Blue Tribe

Eric Wedge's 2003 coaching staff are veterans when it comes to sporting Chief Wahoo — as players, coaches, and managers.

by Yank Poleyeff

For the first time in thirteen years, the Indians enter the regular season led by a manager with no official regular season experience in a Cleveland uniform. New Tribe skipper Eric Wedge, who at age 34 is the youngest manager in Major League Baseball, was hired on the strength of his five years as an extraordinarily successful Minor League manager. But, Wedge has never played for or previously coached the Cleveland Indians.

So in this transitional year, with all eyes focused on the future, it's left up to the Tribe coaches to provide the link between the past and the present. Wedge and Indians General Manager Mark Shapiro have lined up a coaching staff whose roots in Cleveland, familiarity with the Tribe and their fans, and experience in every on-field role imaginable, more than compensate for Wedge's newcomer status.

"Our coaches have so much playing experience, as well as coaching and managing experience, that they're invaluable to me," acknowledged Wedge. "These are guys that I am familiar with, that the organization is familiar with, and that understand the way we want to go about things. These are all pluses for me."

Three members of the 2003 coaching staff have had previous experience playing, coaching, and managing in the Cleveland organization.

New Bench Coach Buddy Bell, returning to the Tribe after managing the Detroit Tigers and Colorado Rockies over the last half-decade, can hardly be considered a newcomer. This assignment begins Buddy's fourth stint with the Tribe. Many fans will remember the most famous of his previous roles, as the Indians popular star third baseman of the 1970s.

"I'm grateful to the Indians that they keep bringing me back!" Bell declared, smiling. "At this time in my life, I needed to be in a place I feel comfortable, not only with the surroundings, but also the people I work for. Cleveland is a perfect fit in both respects."

Joel Skinner returns to the third base coaching lines after his impressive performance as Indians interim manager during the latter half of 2002. Joel's Cleveland connection began when the strapping catcher was acquired from the Yankees in 1989, and it hasn't been broken since.

"The joy of this whole baseball deal," Skinner related, "is that every year has its own signature to it. As coaches, we feed off our personal experiences to attack it the right way. It's a result-oriented business, but because we're working with individuals, successes are possible on many different levels."

Bullpen Coach Luis Isaac, edging his way toward the baseball record books, is now in his 39th consecutive season affiliated with the Indians, and in his 10th straight on the big-league coaching staff.

"When I think of Lou Isaac, the word loyalty comes to mind," Wedge said. "You can't replace his knowledge and feel for the game when it comes to working with young pitchers."

Will Isaac give it up voluntarily any time soon? It sure doesn't sound like it. "Every day," Isaac said during Spring Training, "I wake up at 5AM, dying to get to the ballpark and to put on a shirt with 'INDIANS' across the front. I've never regretted being with the Indians for so long."

Other returnees to the staff are Hitting Coach Eddie Murray, to be inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame this July (see the April issue of GAME FACE for a tribute to Eddie); Jeff Datz, who takes over as First Base Coach after serving as Skinner's Bench Coach last season; and Bullpen Catchers Dan Williams and Dave Keller.

The other newcomer is Pitching Coach Carl Willis, who served in the same capacity with Wedge at Buffalo and Akron over the past three years.

The selection of Bell to fill Datz's shoes as bench coach was a no-brainer, according to Shapiro.

"You don't pass up an opportunity to have a man of his baseball resume – an outstanding player, coach, manager, front office member," Shapiro explained. "Buddy has the ability to impact any organization in any role."

"As bench coach, he'll be a sounding board and will provide some perspective from his experiences in a Major League dugout. He's a perfect complement to a young manager like Eric in that role."

From Bell's perspective, the pairing has had a successful start. "Eric and I think very much alike," Buddy said, "so my job during games comes down to reminding him of things he's probably already thought of."

Bell, who was a five-time All-Star and winner of six Gold Gloves at third during his 18-year playing career, can also draw on his experience as the manager of Team USA at the 1999 Pan-American games in Winnipeg.

"Until you've worn the letters 'USA' on your chest, you don't realize how important it is," Bell recalled. "The competition was intense. We needed to make it to the finals to qualify to play in the 2000 Olympics, and no one on that team will forget who they were standing next to when we beat Mexico in the semifinal. I've been involved in playoffs and World Series in my career, but this was by far the best."

Two players from that competition are among the young stars that the Indians are banking on to regain their prominence in the American League Central standings. Milton Bradley was Bell's

"We had one-on-one meetings with every one of the players we acquired. We emphasized the 'Indians way' of playing the game at our Winter Development Program. And most importantly, during Spring Training, the manager and coaches laid out very clearly the attributes, characteristics, and values of the Cleveland Indians player – and the expectations we have for our team."

Catchers Josh Bard, the Tribe's Opening Day starter, and Victor Martinez, currently at AAA Buffalo, are two prized youngsters with no shortage of role models within the coaching staff. Skinner, Wedge, and Isaac were all catchers in their playing days.

"Catchers are naturally suited for coaching," Isaac said, "because they have to take charge on the field as players. Josh looks to us and to Tim (veteran backup Tim Laker) to learn the way to go about it. The way he learns to play the game will be the Indians way."

Tribe fans have come to appreciate the Indians way, with the excitement and success it has brought to Jacobs Field in recent years. For those who have worked to develop the players that made it happen, guiding a new generation of talented prospects through their on-the-job training is eagerly anticipated. They are confident that the fans will stick with them, and come to enjoy watching the developmental process before their eyes.

"One of the great things about Cleveland fans is that it doesn't take long to figure out what they care about," Bell said. "Cleveland is a big-time town with big-time expectations, but at the same time, the fans are appreciative of a team that plays hard and a team that cares."

"You have to play the game in an honest way, and if you do that, Cleveland fans will be patient and good things will happen."

Passionate about teaching the next generation of Tribe stars are Hall-of-Famer Eddie Murray, hitting coach (left), and Jeff Datz, first base coach (above).

CLEVELAND BASEBALL FEDERATION

*The 8,045 kids of the Cleveland Baseball
Federation wish to thank Cleveland Indians Charities for their support.*

CBF Kids need your support in 2003 and beyond. Each time you make a tax-deductible contribution, you help kids score on the field and in life.

Please join us and help support our 2003 summer baseball programs.

Your generosity makes it possible for CBF to provide: uniforms, equipment, medical coverage, certified umpires, qualified coaches, skills clinics, and social awareness programs.
